Penetrating Paper

When starting a drawing, using paper as base material is a matter of course. Drawing and paper are closely interrelated. Paper is a flexible, well portable drawing surface with the potential of sustaining for hundreds of years when treated with care.

Which possibilities, however, has this material to offer beyond its use as a classical basis for drawing with graphite or charcoal? Why is paper – a mostly industrially produced material – given its raison d'être by the artist – or even given preference by some of the artists and considered the ultimate material?

The answers can be as manifold as there are artists who have selected it as their material, or at least have attributed greater importance to paper within their work.

All artists involved in the exhibition Penetrating Paper have developed their own approach to this material and formed their own handwriting, which, once envisaged and conceived, keeps being recalled.

The starting point or source of inspiration for this exhibition have been the works of some of my gallery's artists who have lent a specific value to the material of paper and have created work series which I have contrasted with works of artist known or unknown to them. Mention should be made here of: Ursula Sax, Stefan Thiel, Colin Ardley, Susanne Pomrehn, Ute Essig, Karina Spechter, Takayuki Daikoku and Dirk Rathke.
